A Love Story (Wine, Water and Song)

According to the writer of John's Gospel, the first miracle Jesus did was to turn ordinary water into wine. I have read this story many times. Often while preparing to officiate a wedding when I will reference it as an illustration of God's interest in weddings. In this story, marriage is used as a metaphor for the relationship between Jesus and the church. Jesus is the bridegroom and the church is His bride.

Some translators use this story to emphasize that following Jesus has rewards beyond the spiritual. After all, Jesus dealt with the most basic of human needs from water to food to clothing. Practical, everyday needs. The idea that the first recorded miracle performed by Jesus was the equivalent of a run to the party store to ensure the party did not end early leaves a lot of room for creative speculation.

Was this first miracle a warm-up act or perhaps foreshadowing? Welcome to week one of our new series, Freedom. Hopefully, the neighbors fireworks stash will soon be as empty as the wine jugs were in Cana on the night of that

Stuck (Thriving in the midst of uncertainty)

As June comes to a close and businesses reopen, I have noticed that my anxiety is less at times. Yet there remains a cloud of uncertainty as the number of infections escalates in states where leadership chose defiance over caution. And the catastrophic failure of leadership at the federal level adds unprecedented levels of uncertainty about the future.

It is no wonder that so many are racing towards some resemblance of normalcy. Even the most resilient among us are pushing the limits of our coping mechanisms. We are learning a lot about ourselves, and a lot of what we learn is unsettling.

I am anxious to do a few of the things I missed over the past three months. But most of all, I am eager to of that first miracle. Our dog, Duke,, could use a rest from the every night explosions of firecrackers and rockets.

Democracy

It is a tradition in this country to celebrate our freedom on the 4th of July. A freedom based on a form of government that we call democracy.

Reinhold Niebuhr, in The Children of Light and the Children of Darkness, writes "Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible; but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary." I suspect that the framers of our Constitution believed this to be true. And a great experiment began that we call democracy taking shape around this idea of freedom with justice.

I'm hopeful that we see the end coming soon, yet I know that the end is elusive. Too fast, too soon, and unmitigated stupidity is likely to result in tens of thousands more unnecessary deaths. And in my more difficult days, I admit that one of the victims could be me or someone close to me. Understandably, a lot of your anxiety and mine comes out of a shared feeling of hopelessness.

Building resiliency

The most basic definition of resiliency is simply the degree to which a person can recover from adversity. We all have varying levels of resiliency. One of the basic building blocks that help us be more resilient is the ways we cope. Like most things where there are choices involved, some ways of coping offer better results than others.

While the degree of resiliency is, in part, based on a person's relationship with the people who raised them, resiliency is also learned. Research has determined that genetics plays a minor role. However, feeling loved as a child plays a significant

Democracy is said to be government by the people — for the people. Our version of democracy is a representative democracy. We elect people to represent us in the governing process, and if they fail to do what they promised — or prove to be incompetent — we elect someone different during the next election.

We don't all agree on what it means to be free. For some, freedom is personal choice. Walking into a building without a face mask, or ordering a fast food burger without the role. Nevertheless, we can discover new coping skills that leave us stronger on the other side of adversity.

New York Times writer, Eilene Zimmerman, knows a lot about recovering from adversity. This year she published her first book, Smacked. Her book comes out of her experiences and research after learning about her former husband's addiction to drugs that went undetected for years. Today Eilene is a journalist living in New York and like her neighbors, dealing with life at the epicenter of a pandemic.

Five years ago, Eilene Zimmerman discovered that the man that she thought she knew, and who seemed to have it all together, used drugs to cope with his anxiety and stress. His addiction eventually included opioids, cocaine, and methamphetamine.

Ms. Zimmerman's recent article about resilience focused on the common characteristics of resilient people. Her experience with death onions. For some, freedom is wearing a sidearm into a Walmart.

But freedom does not mean that we get to do anything that pleases us. We form a democracy for this reason. The people collectively decide on laws that help us to live together — as we pursue life, liberty, and happiness.

And as we debate how to structure and enforce laws and policies that make it possible for each one of us to experience individual freedom, we insist that all voices are heard — that of her former husband gave her a place to begin. After all, his death taught her a lot about coping with adversity. Her article is timely since our resiliency is under strain.

each person is given an opportunity to vote and that the rights of all persons are protected.

Freedom in a democracy is not intended to be only for the wealthy — or the powerful — or any particular group of people. We expect our government to create and enforce laws and policies that preserve freedom for all — regardless of their skin color, their gender — regardless of where their ancestors lived in the past — regardless of the style of clothes they choose to wear — regardless of who they love.

And, I would argue, that a democracy depends on a mutuality that only exists when love is the building block. Freedom, itself, requires a choice to love or not to love others. But can we govern ourselves, democratically, in the absence of love for one another as a foundational principal?

Fruit water and yeast

Before we rush into other critical topics that define what is required to be free, like justice, grace, healing, confession, and forgiveness, let's further love as a foundation for democracy. The wedding story that took place in Palestine, in a village called Cana, is definitely a love story. And it is a foreshadowing of the miraculous transformation that God had in mind for humankind since our eviction from the Garden of Eden.

The COVID-19 pandemic is serious and the numbers of new cases in Genesee County is rising again. If this continues we will suspend our in-person meetings again.

Masks are a requirement while not eating or drinking. If your health conditions prevent wearing a mask plan to stay away for now for your protection and the well-being of others.

We are meeting in person at 12 Noon in the upstairs conference room. If our numbers increase enough to prevent adequate social distancing we will move downstairs. For now, you must bring your own lunch. We are not having a potluck lunch due to health concerns.

Asbury Worship Series Freedom (Coming July 5th)

July 4 is traditionally a big day in this country. But not for everybody. For a lot of people, the promise of freedom described in our country's declaration is elusive. For persons who must argue for, demonstrate for, and put their life on the line for every policy that offers them a piece of the freedom claimed by our declaration, celebration waits for justice.

For many, Juneteenth is closer to a declaration of freedom than July 4. June 19 is an important date because on that date in 1865, sufficient military strength arrived in Texas to enforce freedom for slaves. Two and a half years after President Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation. But while that was an important step, it wasn't the giant step promised by our country's declaration. Page 5

Book Club News

Our plan is for a few of us to meet in person beginning this

Wednesday. This also means moving our time back to 12 Noon. We will continue to be online for those who are not ready to meet in person or who do not want to wear a face mask. Unfortunately, the virus is still a threat and in-person gatherings quickly become super-spreaders if precautions are dropped.

We finished our study of discussions of other religions for now. This proved to be a fascinating subject for us that is sure to come up again in the future. Learning about what other people believe to be true about God did not diminish our own beliefs. Instead, this new knowledge strengthened our faith.

This week we begin our discussions of a book recommended by the staff of Sycamore Creek Church in Lansing. Several of us are participating in a monthly network group with people from several churches. Each month we discuss a topic related to designing worship, hospitality, and church leadership. Our group realized that this book may be of interest to a larger number of people.

The book offers helpful suggestions for reaching persons who aren't a part of a faith community. The writer offers his own success and failures at communicating with people who usually don't understand why we believe with we believe. Our hope is that we can all benefit as more of us learn new ideas that we are willing to put into practice.

I encourage you to join us either in person or online for our Wednesday gatherings. You can call in by phone, be heard, and hear what others are saying by calling (929) 436-2866, and entering the meeting ID, 482458815#.

We are a diverse group and we are delighted when new persons join us. I hope that you will join in on our discussion.

You can contact our office with questions, by phone or simply type your question on our website's homepage — FlintAsbury.org.

What does it mean to be free? Freedom is a goal for every teenager I know, but what freedom looks like is different for each one. Does it mean I get to do whatever I want? Of course not. Freedom requires restraint. Freedom also means access to due process. That is, fair treatment in our judicial systems. Freedom is a big deal. And freedom requires the presence of justice.

There is this story about a time when an important community leader pleaded with Jesus to heal his daughter. So Jesus headed towards the man's home with a large crowd on all sides of him. There was a woman in the crowd who suffered terribly from severe bleeding. Jesus didn't know anything about her, but she believed that Jesus could help her.

The woman's condition had persisted for twelve years. She spent all her money on doctors and treatments that didn't work. Instead of getting better she got worse. She had heard about Jesus, so she came in the crowd behind him, saying to herself, "If I just touch his clothes, I will get well."

As the story continues, the woman touched the cloak of Jesus, and her bleeding stopped. The woman felt the difference at once. And so did Jesus, who stopped in His tracks and asked the crowd of people around Him, "Who touched my clothes?"

Some of His followers who were close to Him all answered at once, "You see how the people are crowding you; why do you ask who touched you?" Jesus kept looking around to see who had done it.

The woman realized what had happened to her and she came forward, trembling with fear, to tell Jesus that it was her who touched His coat. The woman knelt at His feet, and told Him the whole truth. It must have been hard for her to do that.

She didn't know what Jesus might do. She didn't have a way to repay Him, and it is doubtful that she even realized the magnitude of what happened. What she did know without any doubt, was that she was healed. Touching the coat of Jesus accomplished what money and doctors were unable to do. And she was grateful.

But instead of blasting her, Jesus said, "My daughter, your faith has made you well. Go in peace, and be healed of your trouble."

Wow! What a story. This woman whose future was uncertain, with a condition that seemed impossible to rectify, finds healing. But there is more than physical healing going on. After her confession, Jesus sent her on her way with a blessing of peace. The woman was both free of the condition that created so much distress, and free to live in peace.

This is the promise that God makes to all of us who suffer from a condition that no doctor can fix. It is a promise of freedom from conditions that hold us hostage. Freedom from the circumstances that keep us from enjoying the peace that only God can offer.

Of course, not long after this incident with the woman, and after Jesus healed the daughter of the important community leader, the story turns ugly. Regardless of the numbers that Jesus healed, He would later be arrested, denied justice, and hung on a tree until He died.

Afterwards, the lynching tree became a cross. And the cross a symbol for freedom for anyone who turns to Jesus to be set free. The freedom offered by Jesus is unconditional and eternal. The freedom that humankind offers to each other is conditional and temporary. Nevertheless, God offers us a way if we are willing to accept it.

Turning ordinary water into wine is a process that humankind discovered Thousands of years ago likely before the end of the Stone Age. Long before Jesus used this idea to save a party. Fruit is harvested and combined with yeast which begins the process of fermentation. During fermentation, sugars and starches turn into something new which benefits our immune system and the absorption of nutrients. In other words, turning fruit water into fine wine.

The first miracle of Jesus is also a foreshadowing of the process offered to you and I. It is a process from bondage to freedom. To be free, is to be free from bondage. Jesus frees us from bondage out of love.

Dirty water

Scripture doesn't say anything about the condition of the water before it became wine. Only that the jugs used to fetch the water was for bathing. Was the water freshly drawn from the local well?

The condition of the water doesn't seem to matter. Residents of Flint understandably shutter at the thought of using water from the public source for consumption. How could Jesus be certain that His wine was free of heavy metals like lead? Surely, Jesus didn't start with dirty water.

You have kept the best wine until now!

John 3:10

So the condition of the water isn't the point. If Jesus can turn water into fine wine, He can turn dirty water into wine that is free of contaminants. Likewise, Jesus can transform you and me, regardless of our starting point, into something much better.

A love story

One of the most intriguing books found in scripture is the Song of Songs. A collection of erotic, blush-producing love poems that are seldom discussed in church. It is also the only book that is predominately the voice of a woman.

Both Jews and Christians assert that this love story reflects God's love for humankind, and God's desire for people to be free. The setting is a young, black woman, dominated and controlled by her older brothers. The woman worked in the family vineyards, without voice and without power over her own body, enslaved by systemic gender bias. She is treated as property to be traded for favor.

The woman not only uses her voice, she also empowers all women, even referring to her household as her "mother's" house. She is understandably skeptical and impatient with traditional wisdom. She is in love with another person that is of her choosing, going against the norm. The woman and her lover declare their freedom to pursue their love for one another, just as God offers you and me freedom to be who God created us to be.

Professor Renita Weems says this about the Song of Songs, "Intimacy can be as frightening as it is fulfilling...fraught with dangers, unknowns, demands, and unforeseeable consequences...relationships... must be cultivated, nurtured, safeguarded, and cherished." Relationships cannot be taken for granted. Whether relationships with each other or with God.

Love takes us beyond expected boundaries and self-interest past the limits of comfort zones. Love takes risks, embracing new ways of thinking and doing. Love says to you that your importance does not diminish my importance. Love celebrates your dreams and accomplishments.

I hear my lover's voice. He comes running over the mountains, racing across the hills to me.

Song of Songs 2:8

Love does not measure your potential by my failures. Freedom without love is like wedding feast that run out of wine in the middle of the celebration.

Freedom

Love presumes relating to another person. But freedom and relationships are strange bed partners. For example, there is a common tradition of throwing a party for a friend to have one last fling before marriage. One final opportunity to let loose to be single and free, as though a commitment infringes on personal freedom. Yet freedom from the joy of being loved is an empty freedom.

Likewise freedom from no relationships is emptiness. We all have a need to be loved. A need born within us and a reflection of a God who loves us without condition. Unconditional love places a value on each of us that defies calculation. There is no formula that can calculate the value of a human life, despite feeble attempts driven by profit or power to do just that. To treat another human as property is the very essence of depravity and oppression.

Indebtedness is as much an economic issue in scripture as it is about forgiveness. Jesus lived among and advocated for the poor and marginalized. In this series, we explore current examples of indebtedness, and our role as followers of Jesus’ teachings. What issues matter most to you.

For example, one member of our community noted that a person with a gender identity that differs from their biological identity are often marginalized. And it is not enough to avoid persons unwilling to consider that God created them with their identity. Some have been denied essential services during the Covid pandemic.

The pandemic is also shining a bright light on systemic racism. African Americans are disproportionately affected, exposing systemic racism. We serve a diverse community and a God that delights in diversity. What experiences or insights do you have that the rest of us need to hear about?

The people in jobs that help keep the rest of us safe are among the lowest paid. The pandemic is also shining a light on the inequalities of our economic and political systems. The economic separation between the small number of people with most of the wealth and those keeping us safe is large in the U.S. than it is in the rest of the world.

The pandemic is exposing the inadequacies in our healthcare system. Often touted as “world class” healthcare access and quality in the United States is based on economics. Yet fighting a pandemic effectively requires access to healthcare for everyone. Is this an issue that stirs your passion?

Life groups question & notes

You have kept the best wine until now!

John 2:1-10 (GNT)

NOTES FROM WORSHIP

QUESTIONS FOR LIFE GROUPS

1. Read John 2:1-10. Is this a familiar story? What surprises you about this story? Why do you think that the writer of John included this story? What does the story tell you about God?
2. Read the article in this week's Circuit Rider, A love story. Were you already familiar with Song of Songs? What surprises you about this Old Testament Book? What does freedom mean to you? What should living in a democracy be like? Can you be free without love? Do you believe that love is necessary for a democracy? Why or why not?
3. How can the members of your group help you this week and on-going to help you to be more receptive to hearing and understanding the Word of God? Pray for each other to have the Holy Spirit bless you with more courage.

As a journalist, her first step was to interview a large number of highly resilient individuals. In other words, people who successfully recovered after experiencing a lot of adversity. Her first observation was that resilient people have a positive, realistic outlook. Resilient people don't deny their circumstances. But they do look for opportunities to find the positive within the negative.

A pandemic is a traumatic event. It is unpredictable, more so in the U.S. than elsewhere due mostly to a lack of testing and an incompetent president. The pandemic is also uncontrollable, at least by you and me on our own. We can only do what we have the power to do. While this adds to our anxiety, recognizing what we can and cannot control is another attribute that makes us more resilient.

My role model for resiliency is Jesus Christ. Honestly, each time I make such a statement, a voice in my head shouts something like, "Of course, He was the Son of God." The reality is that the advice found in His teachings are insightful for this reason. It is not surprising that Jesus had all of the attributes of a resilient person.

The great news is that even if you choose not to believe that Jesus is also God, your doubt need not diminish the value of His teaching. And learning from a highly resilient person who spent his time helping other is a good starting point.

Highly resilient people also believe in something greater than themselves.

For example, Jesus taught the importance of living a moral life. It turns out that highly resilient people have a moral compass. They have a solid sense of what they consider right and wrong, and it tends to guide their decisions.

Highly resilient people also believe in something greater than themselves. As a result, they participate in religious or spiritual practices. And there is a bonus. The support that comes from being part of a faith community further enhances our resilience.

It is also true that Jesus was quite critical of religious leaders and practices. And I'm confident that He would have even more to criticize today. But Christ doesn't tell us not to get involved. Instead, He cautions us to be sure that our own practices are based on our love for both God and other people.

Which leads me to the next characteristic of highly resilient people. They have a concern for others. Resilient people have a degree of selflessness. And they find a sense of purpose in their beliefs and act on them.

But even highly resilient people are unable to change many of the things they want to change. Instead of fretting over what they cannot change, they focus their energy on what they can change. Dr. Steven Southwick, a psychiatry professor at the Yale University School of Medicine, says resilient people reappraise a problematic situation and look for meaningful opportunities.

One day Jesus was teaching about anxiety. At one point, He asked the question, "Can any of you live a bit longer by worrying about it?" Some of us see the answer to this question as obviously no. Others may think about the answer a bit longer, thinking of exceptions like worrying about things that might affect our well-being.

But the truth is that it is not the worrying that makes a difference. Resilience comes from focusing on the other things that can help. Those things that we can do something about, like wearing a mask and social distancing.

Can any of you live a bit longer by worrying about it?

Luke 12:25

It is a way to freedom that insists on freedom for all persons, unconditionally.

One of the many influences in my life is Dr. James Cone. Dr. Cone died a couple years ago, but his books, insights, and dreams live on. As I read a couple of chapters out of the last book he published before his death, The Cross and the Lynching Tree, I realized something we both had in common. Dr. Cone was also born in Arkansas.

But that is where our similarities end. As a white man, I am a representative of the group who oppressed Dr. Cone along with his ancestors, and all people of color whose bodies resided in this country. Any series on the subject of freedom is hollow if we fail to acknowledge the lack of freedom provided to our black and brown sisters and brothers.

And any acknowledgement of the centuries of injustice is hollow if there is no way forward to a time when we can celebrate our freedom together. But the call for action is not a whisper small, incremental steps. Rather, the call is a deafening and unsettling cry for justice and retribution.

Like the woman who bled for twelve years, our brothers and sisters are bleeding in the streets of our cities, from the hands and knees of violence. It wasn't long ago that our ancestors lynched black bodies from trees and celebrated their power over life and death. Not unlike those who tied Jesus to a tree. Claiming righteousness in the midst of violent injustice.

We are also bleeding from a condition that requires healing. We are suffering from the sickness that afflicts every oppressor. We crave forgiveness even more than we crave freedom.

The people of our capital city killed Him by hanging Him on a tree...

Acts 10:39

We all need to touch the coat of Jesus, and to confess that it is us who drained His energy in the hope of finding a solution to our suffering. And peace is ours when we at least surrender our privilege at the feet of the lynching tree.

Our next series, begins the day after our nation traditionally celebrates our freedom. This year is different than past years. The pandemic brought to life our utter helplessness without a cooperative and collaborative effort. And we are not yet on the other side. Wouldn't it be just like God to hold our feet to the fire until at last, we confess our sin, not just with our intentions, but with decisive and lasting action.

The journey ahead promises to be difficult. The lynching tree on which Christ was executed in an effort to silence Him and return to normal, is both a symbol of salvation and despair. But God is never silent when it comes to injustice and oppression. And God speaks with decisive and lasting action. The Word of God never returns empty.
