Chemistry (A drink between friends)

My parents made it abundantly clear that the well behind my grandparent's home was out of bounds for my sister and me. Perhaps this is what created the intrigue for me. Something about a hole in the ground where fresh, pure water can be fetched captured my imagination.

"Don't go near that well, Tommy. If you fall in, you'll drown, and no one will know you down there!" Well, that was good enough for me. Sort of.

I was anxious to go with my father to the well and help him get water. The well had a bucket tied to a rope running through a single pulley connected to a rafter holding up the small roof over the well. My dad lowered the bucket down the well until it broke the water's surface, tipped over, and filled with

Access (Inalienable Rights)

The Declaration of Independence that set in motion the beginning of our emerging nation begins with a statement that is, at the same time, inspiring and exclusionary. The spirit of our preamble states that humans have certain unalienable rights that government has the responsibility to protect. However, at the time, the men who wrote the founding documents differentiated based on gender and race.

Fast forward a couple of centuries, and our country is among the global powers that are called to stand up for protecting these rights for everyone regardless of their gender, race, or any other difference. As such, our country is one of the creators of the "Universal Declaration of Human Rights" adopted by the United Nations as a template for all countries to follow.

Eric Nilsen explains, "Human rights are the fundamental liberties and rights that every person in the world possesses from birth to death. They apply no matter where we are from, what we believe, or how we live our lives. They are inalienable, meaning they can never be taken away."

Maybe so, but human rights can be curtailed and taken away whenever government fails to put intent into practice. Among numerous other proclamations, this universal declaration recognizes that "all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights."

And so social justice deals with the messiness that comes with making this declaration a reality. "The primary goal of social justice is to create a more equitable society for all individuals," writes Eric Nilsen. However, protecting human rights includes the equitable distribution of our planet's resources.

A world where every human's rights are celebrated and protected sounds like an impossible utopia. It sounds like heaven. Fortunately, heaven on earth is a recurring theme throughout scripture, and Jesus taught us how to pursue this dream together.

There is a story in the Gospel of John that has inspired, challenged, and puzzled believers for centuries. Jesus decides to travel through Samaria. This fact alone challenges us to fill in the missing explanations. Why on earth would a Jewish man travel through Samaria on purpose? The rift between Samaritans and Jews was centuries old. Neither side fraternized with the other but avoided each other whenever possible.

Since we're not given an explanation, we're left to speculate amid compelling evidence that everything Jesus did was intentional.

And why Sychar? This is the village where Jesus stops and sits at the public well. Perhaps Sychar was on the path Jesus chose to follow, and it was time for a break. But, on the other hand, this town also had historical significance.

It would be centuries later, before the site where Jacob purchased land, built a homestead, and dug a well, is turned into a place for pilgrims and tourists to visit. The author doesn't leave us guessing if this was the same land where Jacob lived and adds the specifics. Sharing that Jesus arrived around Noon, tired from traveling, when He sat down by Jacobs Well.

In Samaria Jesus came to a town named Sychar... Jacob's well was there, and Jesus, tired out by the trip; sat down by the well.

John 4:1-6

The story of the well that Jesus visited reads like a romantic drama. It is the story of two families treating one woman as property. We don't know what really happened. Did the son of a Canaanite Prince assault the daughter of a wealthy Hebrew family, or were they the original version of Romeo and Juliet? We do know that it was not a proud moment for Jacob. The violence towards their sisters husband-to-be and the entire village by his sons put their whole family at risk of revenge.

Afterward, Jacob's family packed up and left town. While they may have taken everything, including the kitchen sink, they had to leave the well behind. And wells often provide life-sustaining nourishment for generations to come. Before his death, Jacob leaves their former home to a younger son, Joseph, who he favors. Joseph's story is amazing, but his story is for another time.

Krista Dover of CleanWaterfortheWorld.org, writes, "The well gave water to Israelites and Canaanites. It gave water to Jews and Samaritans. And one day, many hundreds of years later, that well gave Jesus a place to rest on a hot and dusty day."

Meanwhile, centuries later, Jesus sits by the well left there by Jacob, and history is made. And the well is no longer the private property of one family. Instead, Jacob's well is now Sychar's well, accessible to everyone in the community in need of water. And this includes a Jewish Rabbi passing through town.

Heaven on earth, where human rights are celebrated and protected, requires access to the resources necessary for life to flourish. While public wells are usually replaced with public water systems in our country, access to clean water is a challenge in many places.

According to water.org, it's estimated that women and girls spend 266 million hours daily accessing water for their families. And 771 million people lack access to safe water.

Did Jesus draw Himself a cool drink from Jacob's well? Stay tuned next week for what comes next.

The Season of Lent is a special time of year for many churchgoers, and Lent is celebrated in various ways. For many, Lent represents a time of deep reflection. For others, Lent is a time for dieting or giving up favorite foods. The day before Lent begins is commonly referred to as "Fat Tuesday") as some of us indulge by eating a pastry known as a Paczki.

We launch our new series on Wednesday, February 22, with an Ash Wednesday service at Court Street Church. The themes for our series is shared among Flint Area United Methodist Churches. Our series is based on content provided by a local non-profit, Clean Water for the World.

At Asbury Church, we're calling our series Thirsty.

Book Club News

As the Season of Lent

progresses we put our belief into practice inspired by a new series, Thirsty. A lot of our content for our series is inspired and provided by the nonprofit CleanWaterfortheWorld.org. Access to clean water is necessary to sustain life. Therefore, clean water is a social justice issue when access is denied.

In order to help us navigate the complexities of social justice while digging into what scripture has to say about God's view on clean water, we're turning to journalist and author Eric Nilsen.

Author of Democracy From Then to Now and Understanding Social Justice, Nilsen has lived and worked in different parts of the world. His experiences give him an informed perspective and knowledge of different cultures, religions, and societies. These experiences inspired him to share his knowledge and viewpoints with us through our study of one of his books.

Understanding Social Justice offers us a clearer understanding of issues, their causes, and the need to address and resolve them. Eric Nilsen offers an opportunity to make a passion for human rights a way of life. And to motivate us to pursue social justice for everybody.

If you are serious about switching from equity talk to equity walk and making the world a fairer and more just place where everyone can thrive, you first need to comprehend how and why prevalent and ingrained in our society.

We launch our new series on Wednesday, February 22, with an Ash Wednesday service at Court Street Church. The themes for our series is shared among Flint area United Methodist Churches. Our series is based on content provided by a local nonprofit, Clean Water for the World.

At Asbury Church, we're calling our series Thirsty.

Water is a powerful metaphor in scripture. From the creation story in Genesis to the river of the water of life in Revelations that sparkled like crystal, water is crucial to life. Life is unattainable without water, but not all water is suitable for human consumption.

In this series, we'll dig into a few water stories from scripture as we explore the obstacles preventing access to clean water for everyone. And we'll learn about responses and how we can help ourselves and others.

The Book of Resolutions of the United Methodist Church, adopted in 2016, calls access to clean water a human right. Yet, estimates of water usage predict that global water demand could surpass sustainable supply by 40 percent by the end of the decade. This prediction is based on energy production utilizing 75% of total water consumption combined with rising energy usage and population growth.

In the U.S., we take access to clean water for granted. At least we did until 2016, when residents of Flint discovered that our public water supply was unsafe to drink.

Speaking of Thirsty. Did you know Flint is not the only U.S. city dealing with lead in their public water? According to the NRDC, high levels of lead are showing up in the public water of Baltimore, Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, Newark, New York, Pittsburgh, and Washington D.C. Another study estimates that over half of U.S. residents drank water with detectable levels of lead between 2018 and 2020.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) estimates the number of lead service lines to be between 6 to 10 million. However, a 2021 NRDC survey estimates a number closer to 12 million. Either way, there is a lot of damage left to undo.

Lead is a national crisis, and President Biden has called for eliminating all lead service pipes. But is this enough?

Most Flint residents are familiar with the dangers of lead. We took the time to learn about lead because too many of us ingested lead by drinking water coming out of our public water source. In 2016, Flint appeared in headlines worldwide when it became public that children were testing for high lead levels. In fact, lead levels had doubled since the city water began coming from a different source.

If life itself is a human right then so is access to clean water. I invite you to join us for this series that promises to be informative, challenging, and inspiring.

We welcome Pastor Brian Willingham from Bristol / Burton Christ Churches who plans to be at Asbury on March 12.

I pray that you will join us each Sunday morning at 10:30 am. We share our weekly episodes on our YouTube channel. We go live at 10:30 am. You can find these links along with more information about us, or join our live broadcast on our website at FlintAsbury.org.

water. Then he pulled on the rope, letting it curl up by his feet until the bucket emerged from the top of the well, overflowing with water.

When my dad lifted me up so I could look into the well beyond the darkness, I could see the bucket sinking into the water below, if the light was just right. A common dipper was hanging on the side of one of the corner posts holding up the roof. It was too high for me to reach it. But once the bucket was out of the well, my dad would offer me a drink out of the dipper. The water was cold even on the hottest days.

My mom was right. It was a long way down to the water below and dark. And it was impossible to tell the depth of the water. So my sister and I found other places to explore, leaving the well for the adults. But as I got older, my grandmother would send me out to the well to fetch water for meals or ensure her dogs had fresh water. Fortunately, her well was only a short distance from the backdoor and her kitchen.

My grandparents were fortunate to have their own well, close to their home. Although by today's standards, at least in the U.S., their situation was archaic. My grandmother finally got water coming directly into her kitchen a few years after my grandfather passed. Initially skeptical, she worried the water wouldn't be as fresh.

It's hard to imagine that millions live without access to clean water and millions more spend a lot of their time fetching water for everyday use. Research offered by water.org estimates women and girls spend 266 million hours daily accessing water for their families. And 771 million people lack access to safe water. How can this be in a world where so many of us fill our tubs and take longer showers than necessary for cleanliness?

The challenges are numerous but solvable. However, many systemic obstacles require changing cultural norms founded on bias and discrimination. The solution begs for divine intervention and transforming hardened hearts even as we hold tight to the way it was. Okay, the way we think it was!

Cultural do's, and don't do's take time and effort to learn. And as they're passed down through generations, the details get lost and convoluted into new justifications. While many, if not most, customs come out of learned experience, some are based on bias. Unfortunately, caretakers often pass these on to the children under their care camouflaged as wisdom.

Jesus saw through bias and frequently ignored traditions based on prejudice rather than wisdom. A famous example is the story of the woman at the well.

Jesus and His followers pass through Sychar on their way to Galilee. Jesus finds a place to sit next to a well while the rest go into town to find food. We learned last week that the well was first dug by Jacob and his family when they settled there. And the well provided water for the generations that came after them. After the others left for town, a Samaritan woman came to the well to fetch water.

Constructing plausible scenarios that fill in missing information has long been a favorite pastime for theologians. Our pursuit of what isn't said is understandable. While the most important facts are found in the conversation between Jesus and the woman, a lot is going on between the lines that isn't said.

For example, one of the cultural never do's could have prevented the conversation from taking place at all. For one, according to Jewish custom, men don't engage in discussions with unfamiliar women. Moreover, this woman was of Samaritan descent, which created a strong cultural barrier that wasn't ordinarily crossed. And the woman was quite aware of the rules.

When Jesus asks the woman for a drink of water, she responds, "You are a Jew, and I am a Samaritan, so how can you ask me for a drink?" But then, the narrator adds a further complication. The two conflicted cultures also don't share common dippers.

Whether Jesus was thirsty when he asked the woman for a drink is buried in the backstory and not spelled out. Jesus and His friends were on the road and likely tired, dusty, hungry, and parched from a day of walking. Have you ever been so thirsty the word "parched" described your condition?

Roger Owens, a Professor of Christian Spirituality and Ministry at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary,

LIFE GROUP QUESTIONS & MORE:

You are a Jew, and I am a Samaritan—how can you ask me for a drink? Jews will not use the same cups and bowls that Samaritans use. Jesus answered, If you only knew what God gives and who is asking you for a drink, you would ask Him, and He would give you life-giving water.

John 4:7-15

NOTES FROM WORSHIP

Handwriting lines for notes.

QUESTIONS FOR LIFE GROUPS

- 1. Read John 4:7-15. Why do you think the woman was fetching water during the hottest part of the day? Some speculate that this well was a longer walk from the well used by most living in Sychar — does it matter? Why or why not? Tell about your experiences with drinking water from a well.
2. Read this week's articles titled Chemistry. Have you ever been really thirsty? What was it like? Describe how you felt when you quenched your thirst? What else leaves us feeling parched when it is missing? What is living water for you?
3. How can the members of your group help you this week and on-going to help you to be more receptive to hearing and understanding the Word of God? Pray for each other to have the Holy Spirit bless you with more courage.

“Feed Flint”

“Feed Flint”

A meal goes a long way for a senior living alone, a family struggling to make ends meet, or a child fearful of empty shelves at home. But for the residents of Flint who carry the effects of lead-tainted water, nutrition is critical. Feed Flint provides locally grown, chemical-free, fresh produce to residents living in and around Flint. And we're hoping that you can help us provide 10,000 meals this summer.

Feed Flint includes takeout meals, produce boxes with recipes, and home deliveries as part of our work to guide and support families in moving to sustainable abundance. The reality is that Michigan's food insecurity levels got worse during the COVID-19 pandemic, and this summer's recovery is leaving behind those at the most risk of having to miss meals.

Flint families continue to struggle with the ongoing effects of the water crisis.

We're bringing together the resources of the Asbury Community Development Corporation. This includes Asbury Farms, the South Flint Soup Kitchen, the Asbury Community Help Center, multiple food pantries, and our Sizzling Culture Mobile Food Trailer. Our plan is to care for our neighbors when they need it most. We accept all people as they are, and our doors are always open to anyone.

Asbury Farms provides locally grown produce used to create fabulous and nutritious meals. Our seed-to-table approach is community-based. This not only helps families make it through emergencies and crises. We help move families towards sustainable abundance.

Our Sizzling Culture program provides jobs and new skills to our city's youth. This includes year-round employment. Our staff and most of our volunteers come from the neighborhoods we support. We call this sustainable abundance because families move from need-based on scarcity to enough based on community-generated abundance.

Our work is also about food and justice. Our vision is a revitalized community where every resident can use their talents and passions for the common good, where children grow into active citizens. And all residents can enjoy safety, good health, and a culture that fosters life-long learning and satisfying lives. This summer, help us address food insecurity and strengthen Flint's budding local food system by supporting the Feed Flint campaign. Thank you for taking the time to see what we're doing and considering how you can help.

In this reading of social justice, you will find a broad analysis of the big issues around social justice, and new insights that will challenge your understanding of what justice really means.

For Lent, our group will dig deeper into each week's message utilizing reference materials from Clean Water for the World, Understanding Social Justice, and our Sunday message. Our goal is to wrestle with obstacles preventing access to clean water and reflect on possible solutions. Stories from scripture offer guidance on every aspect of life. Interpreting and applying biblical truths, however, require prayerful discernment that is best done in a group.

I invite you to join us each Sunday for worship as we explore what it means that access to clean water is a human right. I invite you to join us for this series that promises to be informative, challenging, and inspiring. And I pray that you'll join us each Wednesday as we dive further into each week's teaching.

If you prefer to avoid groups or live too far away, I encourage you to join us via Zoom for our Wednesday gatherings. Alternatively, you can call in by phone, be heard, and hear what others say by calling (929) 436-2866 -- enter the meeting ID, 282 039 5568#.

We are a diverse group and are delighted when new people join us. I hope that you will join in on our discussion.

shared a story in a reflection published in the Upper Room Disciplines. A student's presentation was particularly impactful, using parched repeatedly to emphasize a thirst that demands resolution. Have you ever been parched?

Have you ever reached a point where your mouth was so dry you could taste and feel the gritty dryness?

Likely, there wasn't a common bucket and rope at the well and no pulley to make retrieving water less burdensome. And clearly, Jesus wasn't carrying a bucket when he arrived. But Jesus also had the woman's attention. Social customs melted, making way for a deeper conversation.

Thirst is a condition of dryness caused by more than dehydration. The same is true for hunger. Even after we're hydrated and satisfied, we're still parched if lacking other necessities for abundant life.

The answer that Jesus offers back puts outdated social customs in their rightful place while opening the treasure chest of possibilities. "If you only knew what God gives and who it is that is asking you for a drink, you would ask Him, and He would give you life-giving water," Jesus replied.

Those who drink the water that I will give them will never be thirsty again.

John 4:14

This scene took place centuries before tele sales, TV ads, and email spam. Nevertheless, the woman knew a line when she heard it. But instead of walking away, she dug a little deeper. After all, she came to a public well for water. "You don't have a bucket, and the well is deep. Where would you get that life-giving water?" the woman replied.

I'm willing to go out on a limb here and tie the way this conversation progresses to the divine intervention I mentioned earlier. How can some of us access extravagance while millions lack the means for basic sustenance? How can parts of our country be food deserts amid so much waste? How can most of us sleep in comfortable beds within the safety of an affordable home while numerous others lack dependable shelter?

These injustices happen because so many of us are parched. We're thirsty for living water that transforms us into doers rather than complainers.

Jesus reminds us that when we quench our thirst for basic necessities, we get thirsty again. So experts tell us to drink water daily and eat balanced meals. But each day is another meal schedule and another trip to the well for water.

And then Jesus tells us about living water that quenches a deeper thirst. A thirst that creates competition for resources and bias towards anyone who we perceive as threatening our advantage. And all who drink the water that Jesus offers will never be thirsty again. Instead, the Holy Spirit will be in them like a spring, providing them with life-giving water and eternal life.

"Sir," the woman said, "give me that water! Then I will never be thirsty again."

Your hobby farm probably started as a way to get back to your roots, literally. It was a way for you to reconnect with nature, your food, and the land and a way to create a sustainable lifestyle. And you're probably aware that there is a growing demand for organic produce and healthy living.

Thus, the idea of turning what was once a hobby into a business enterprise is a smart one. And there are several ways of going about monetizing your farm, depending on what you enjoy doing, what your farm will support, and what the need is in your area. Below, Asbury Farms explains more about how to develop your passion into a hobby farm.

Choose the Products You Will Sell

The first step is deciding what you want to sell. You can sell vegetables, eggs, honey, or other goods that you produce on your farm. If you are not sure what will be popular with the public, then ask your friends and family for their opinion.

Besides produce, you might consider selling crafts like wreaths made from items on your farm, homemade soap, beeswax candles, handmade birdhouses, or whatever craft you enjoy.

You can have a U-pick for strawberries, a Christmas tree farm, or a pumpkin patch with hayrides. But of course, all of those would mean your farm has easy access to a road and a town within easy commute.

Determine Your Target Audience

Next, you need to think about where your audience is. Do you want to sell at a farmers market, a grocery store, or through a CSA, Community Supported Agriculture? Next, how much time do you want to spend on sales? Do you want to be more hands-on and sell at markets in person? Or do you prefer the convenience of selling through an online shop?

If you're selling online, HostGator explains that you must make sure your website lists all of the items that you want to sell as well as what they will cost per item or by weight (if it's something like honey). You also need to include information about where the product is coming from (your farm) so customers know they are getting quality goods from an ethical source.

You may decide to get involved in a community organization like Asbury Farms that resources local farms to feed those in need. Look into similar programs in your area to give back to the community.

Make Your Marketing Efforts Count

Make sure that you have a website that is easy to navigate and provides information about your farm. This will attract customers who want to know more about the products that you have available.

Use social media platforms such as Instagram, Facebook, and Twitter to get the word out about what you have to offer in terms of products or services. These platforms are free and easy for anyone with an internet connection, so they are accessible to a wide range of people. Share pictures of what goes on there on a regular basis, and include videos. You can also make a YouTube channel to provide how-to tutorials.

As you are selecting content for your social media and other digital marketing posts, be sure to focus on SEO (search engine optimization) practices. You'll want to use the right key words and phrases in your content and metadata so that search engines pull your content when people search for those phrases. It's important to know that PDFs are more SEO compatible than other file formats, so use them for your posts. You can convert most files over to this format using a free online conversion tool.
